In a Nutshell

We are an international, interdisciplinary programme covering human rights in their legal, political and philosophical dimensions. Over the course of three semesters, our students delve into contemporary debates on justice, equality and the protection of human dignity.

Along with solid theoretical foundations, they also acquire practical knowledge through, for example, field trips and internships.

The combination of interdisciplinary skills with first-hand experience in an international learning environment makes the MA Human Rights a leading program in its field.

How to Apply?

Applicants must hold a university degree based on at least 3.5 years of full-time studies (equivalent to 210 ECTS credits).

In addition, at least one year of professional experience in the area of human rights—or one year of professional experience in a different field, combined with practical experience in human rights work on a voluntary basis—is expected.

A certified command of English is required for admission.

Applications will be accepted between 9 February and 31 May. Decisions will be taken in March and June. To have your application reviewed in March, it has to reach us by 28 February.
